

Congressman Blumenauer recognizes that technological innovation is a key component to the continued health and prosperity of the United States. From alternative energy to broadband internet to medical imaging and advanced therapies, the federal government must reduce barriers to technological breakthroughs, and ensure that all Americans are able to benefit from new achievements in science and technology.