

On Friday, Congressman Blumenauer visited the new Port of Portland building near Portland International Airport. In addition to meeting with Port officials and touring the new building, Blumenauer visited the Air Traffic Control Tower for the airport.

Blumenauer discussed several topics with Port of Portland staff including possible expanded air service, the continued growth of Port facilities, and the on-going attempts to clean up the Willamette River. In the Control Tower, the Congressman also observed how air traffic will be handled during upcoming construction on the airport's north runway.

Portland International Airport is consistently ranked as one of the nation's best airports and the new Port office building was recently named one of ten greenest buildings in the world by Forbes Magazine.

On Friday, Congressman Blumenauer visited the new Port of Portland building near Portland International Airport. In addition to meeting with Port officials and touring the new building, Blumenauer visited the Air Traffic Control Tower for the airport.

Blumenauer discussed several topics with Port of Portland staff including possible expanded air service to Washington D.C., the continued growth of Port facilities, and the on-going attempts to cleanup the Willamette River. In the Control Tower, the Congressman also observed how air traffic will be handled during upcoming construction on the airport's north runway.

Portland International Airport is consistently ranked as one of the nation's best airports and the new Port office building was recently named one of ten greenest buildings in the world by Forbes Magazine.